This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

PREFACE.

The present volume forms the third portion of the exhaustive edition of the Anglo-Saxon Gospels, as planned by Mr Kemble. The first portion was published in 1858, with the title—"The Gospel according to St Matthew, in Anglo-Saxon and Northumbrian Versions, synoptically arranged: with collations of the best Manuscripts. Edited for the Syndics of the University Press. Cambridge: at the University Press. 1858." The second portion was published in 1871, with the title—"The Gospel according to St Mark, in Anglo-Saxon and Northumbrian Versions synoptically arranged, with collations exhibiting all the readings of all the MSS. Edited for the Syndics of the University Press, by the Rev. Walter W. Skeat, M.A. Cambridge: at the University Press, 1871."

Owing to the death of Mr Kemble before the first portion was completed, no Preface was written to that volume, beyond a short notice by Mr Hardwick explaining the circumstances under which he undertook to finish it. In the Preface to Saint Mark's Gospel, I endeavoured to give some account of the MSS., and of the principal points of interest concerning them. To this the reader is referred for further information, and it will only be necessary to repeat here the account of the mode of arrangement of the various texts and collations, and to make a few remarks upon some new points that have suggested themselves.

The arrangement of matter is the same in this volume as in the two volumes preceding it. The following is the scheme of the contents of any two opposite pages, after p. 13.

The numbers or names of these MSS. are:

I. (CORPUS) MS. No. CXL (formerly S. 4) in the library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, described by Wanley in the second volume of Hickes's 'Thesaurus,' at p. 116.

II. (CAMBRIDGE or A.) MS. Ii. 2. 11 in the Cambridge University Library, described by Wanley, p. 152.

III. (BODLEY or B.) MS. Bodley NE. F. 3. 15, now Bodley 441; described by Wanley, p. 64.

IV. (COTTON or C.) MS. Cotton, Otho C. 1, in the British Museum; described by Wanley, pp. 211, 212. Imperfect, and damaged by fire.

V. (HATTON) MS. Hatton 38, in the Bodleian library, Oxford; described by Wanley, p. 76.

VI. (ROYAL) MS. Bibl. Reg. 1. A. XIV (British Museum); described by Wanley, p. 181.

VII. (LINDISFARNE) MS. Cotton, Nero D. 4 (British Museum); known also as the 'Lindisfarne MS.,' and as the 'Durham book[1].' Well known, and often described; see Wanley, p. 250.

VIII. (RUSHWORTH) MS. Auct. D. ii. 19, in the Bodleian library, Oxford; commonly called the 'Rushworth MS.'

The rubrics in the left margin of the left-hand pages are from MS. A (or II). A few of them occur also in B. (BODLEY), but they are mostly copied from A. (CAMBRIDGE) in a late hand, and are of no authority. In a few cases the rubrics in B. are in an older hand, and they are then duly noted.

The rubrics in the right margin of the ~~right~~ left-hand pages are from the Hatton MS.; but they occur also in the Royal MS., without any variation.

The numbers in the right-hand margin of the right-hand pages are from the Lindisfarne MS., and refer to the "Ammonian sections," as well as to the sections into which the Gospel was divided for the purpose of being read at various times. They supply references to the parallel passages in the other Gospels.

The Latin text of the Rushworth MS. is omitted to save space; but its variations of reading are all recorded in the Appendix. It contains many clerical errors and corrupt forms of words.

The Northumbrian gloss in the Rushworth MS. is partly copied from that in the Lindisfarne MS., and sometimes answers to the Latin text of that MS. instead of to its own text; as already has been noted (Pref. to St Mark, p. xiii).

[1] See the publications of the Palæographical Society for good specimens of facsimiles from this celebrated MS.

At p. 1 of the present volume is a list, which was intended to shew the days on which certain portions of the Gospel were to be read. Unfortunately, the rubricator has omitted to insert the numbers of the sections at the side, so that the exact significance of it is left uncertain. The words at the top are—"Secundum lucan," glossed by "æft*er* luc*as*," i. e. according to St Luke; followed by the remark—"ðus mercong ælces gospel*les* ðe ontuoelm*ona*ð [sic; for on tuoelm*ona*ð] byres on lucases dæl," i. e. the marking of each gospel that, during the year, belongs to Luke's portion.

At p. 2, follows the life of St Luke commonly ascribed to St Jerome, though not found in the MSS. of his translation of the New Testament; as noted in Migne's edition of St Jerome's works, vol. x, col. 1049. It is found in several of the early printed editions of the Vulgate, and in some of the MSS., as e.g. in the Codex Amiatinus, edited by Tischendorf.

At p. 3, are the headings, or abstracts of the contents of each section into which the Gospel is divided.

The Critical Notes, in the Appendix, contain such observations, mostly of minor importance, as could not very well be printed with the text, for want of space. I may perhaps repeat here, that the Lindisfarne MS. not only employs the usual rune for "man" several times, but occasionally uses the very same character with its less usual signification of "day," as in Ch. xxi. 34; also in xxiii. 56 and xxiv. 1, where "sunna dæg" is written "sun̄," with the rune ·ᛞ· following. Another peculiarity is the occasional use of red ink, as noted at p. 23, where a word has been supplied by the glossator Aldred, who seems merely to have superintended the glossing of the first three gospels, but to have glossed the fourth gospel himself for the most part, as it is chiefly written in red ink, and has certain orthographical peculiarities. I may also note that, whereas it is commonly believed that the symbol þ does not occur in the Lindisfarne gloss at all, except when written with a cross stroke (ꝥ) as an abbreviation for "þæt," I have found just two instances of its occurrence, viz. in Ch. i. v. 59, where the MS. has þone for ðone, and in Ch. xxiv. v. 1, where the MS. really has þæm, not ðæm. The forms printed in those passages are not due to errors of the press.

Before concluding this Preface, however, it will be as well to place on record an account of a discovery, which enables us to trace the "pedigree" of the MSS., or their mutual relationship to each other, with considerable exactness. I have already shewn (Pref. to St Mark, p. x.) that the Hatton MS. was copied from the Royal MS.; and, accordingly, at the end of St Luke's Gospel, we find a few verses, omitted at the end of the Royal MS. as originally written, supplied in the very handwriting of the scribe of the Hatton MS., who has also written a few words on the opposite blank page preceding St John's Gospel. These words are—"Soðlice ge syn"—shewing that the scribe was merely trying his pen, and took a few words from a passage in Ch. xxiv. 48, which was just before his eyes; and he also added a memorandum to this effect—"Scē GREGORIES se mid grecum crissostomas (sic) ys haten;" i. e. St Gregory, who amongst the Greeks is surnamed Chrysostomus.

Not only, however, is the HATTON MS. (V) copied from the ROYAL MS. (VI), but the latter is itself a copy from the BODLEY MS. (III). This first appeared in the course of editing the 16th Chapter of this Gospel. On arriving at the words "Ðas ðing" in v. 14, I found that the next leaf was not in the same handwriting, and it was at once obvious that a leaf had here been lost in the original MS., and the missing portion supplied in a recent hand[1], on newer vellum. This leaf must have been lost at a very early period; for, when the scribe of the ROYAL MS. came to it, he could not find it, and passed on at once (without any break beyond a slight space about a quarter of an inch long) to the next word which he did find, which of course was the first on the following leaf in the BODLEY MS., viz. the word "unmihtlic" in Ch. xvii. v. 1. The scribe of the HATTON MS. also missed the same passage, of course because it was not accessible to him. As soon as ever this clue was obtained, I was at once enabled to understand the whole matter: all the peculiarities of the ROYAL MS. are due to the BODLEY MS. which the scribe had before him. It was thence, for instance, that he copied the few rubrics which he has inserted, and it was thence that he derived certain peculiarities of spelling. At the same time, he made a few alterations at his own will, with the result that his MS. presents the text of the BODLEY MS. with a few later forms, just as the HATTON MS. represents the ROYAL MS., with more numerous alterations in the direction of later spelling. It is proper also to add, by way of making assurance doubly sure, that the few verses originally omitted at the end of the last Chapter in the ROYAL MS. were omitted for a precisely similar reason, viz. because another leaf was again lacking at that point in the BODLEY MS.; and the missing passage is again supplied on newer vellum by a later hand. After this, a careful re-examination of all the MSS. shewed that the COTTON MS. (IV) is (with the exception of a very few clerical errors) an absolute duplicate, word for word and letter for letter, of the BODLEY MS., whilst both of these, in their turn, agree so closely with the CORPUS MS. (I), also word for word, and almost letter for letter, that all three must be mere copies from one and the same original, not now forth-coming[2]. The CAMBRIDGE MS. (II), again, is exactly the very same text, word for word, but

[1] No doubt under the supervision of Archbishop Parker, who was much given to 'mending' MSS. He would have been better advised in letting them alone. As, however, it is owing to him that many MSS. have been preserved, criticism is out of place.

[2] I have said this before (Pref. to St Mark, p. vii). All I now do is to offer further proof, based on re-examination of the MSS.

with a few changes of spelling. This will appear more clearly from the analysis of a whole chapter, and I select for this purpose the 3rd chapter, as being conveniently short, and remarkable for the absence of the genealogy.

Taking the text as the standard, the sole variations of MSS. B. (III) and C. (IV) from it are these.

1. B. anwaldes (for anwealdes)[1]. C. forðan (a mere clerical error for feorðan, which occurs twice, and the first time is spelt correctly). 3. B. C. rice (for ricæ). 4. Clypiendes stefn (for Clypiende stefen, and due to the fact that Clypiende is a clerical error in the Corpus MS.). 7. B. C. hig (for hi; the spellings hi and hig being convertible even in the same MS.). B. C. cyn (for cynn). 8. C. gos (a clerical error for god). 9. B. C. wæstm (for wæsm; due to the clerical error wæsm in the Corpus MS.). 14. C. repeats ⁊ cwædon (a clerical error). 16. B. C. ⁊swarode (for ⁊swarude). 19. B. broður; C. broþur (for broðor). C. yfellu*m* (for yfelu*m*). 20. B. C. cwerterne (for cwearterne). 22. B. C. halga (for halega). C. aastah (clerical error for astah). B. C. stefn (for stefen). 23. C. þrittig (for þritig). B. C. men (for menn). 24. B. C. cneoresse (once only, it being spelt cneorysse the first time, as in the text).

Now what do these variations amount to? Putting aside absolute clerical errors, they merely give the following very slight alterations of spelling, viz.—anwealdes, anwaldes; ricæ, rice; stefn, stefen; hi, hig; cynn, cyn; ⁊swarude, ⁊swarode; broðor, broður; cwearterne, cwerterne; halega, halga; þritig, þrittig; menn, men; cneorysse, cneoresse. Here are twelve variations only, all of the slightest character, all of them merely such as are found within the compass of any one of the three MSS. taken individually, and solely due to the fact that the same words were not always spelt the same way by the same scribe. The three MSS. are practically, one and the same, representing the language of the same period, and all drawn from a common original, from which, for all that we can tell, they may have been copied nearly at the same time.

It is only thus that we can account for such close coincidences as are of frequent occurrence. One example may suffice to shew the nature of them. In Ch. xxii. v. 52, the word to is accidentally repeated in the CORPUS MS., and the same peculiarity occurs in the COTTON MS.; whilst in the BODLEY MS. the word was also repeated in the MS., in its original condition, though the second to has been carefully erased at a later period.

A similar investigation shews that the CAMBRIDGE MS. (II) is also from the same source; it differs somewhat in grammatical forms, and seems to be a little later in date than the rest.

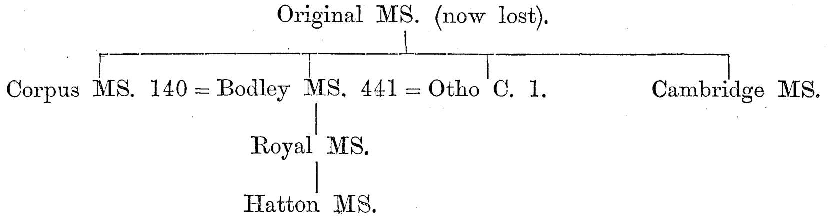
[1] The variations of C. cannot always be ascertained, because the MS. is damaged; but the damage is, on the whole, very slight. Most of it can be read, at least throughout St Luke's gospel.

This enables us to make the following scheme of the pedigree of the MSS. containing the Wessex translation of the Gospels.



It seems worth while to repeat and insist upon the preceding facts, because they entirely dispose of some false ideas that have been put forward concerning this interesting Old English Version. Thus, when Mr Thorpe, in his preface to the A.-S. Gospels, talks of the Bodley MS. (III) as exhibiting "the tongue in its decline, and rapidly verging towards that state of barbarism into which it sank about the beginning of the twelfth century;" of Marshall's edition, which was really founded on the same MS., as exhibiting "an earlier (!) but not perhaps a purer text;" and of his own edition, which was a reprint of Marshall's edition with corrections from the other MSS., as "free from the objections above mentioned," it must be remembered that he is really describing, under three very different aspects, the same text all the while; which cannot but be puzzling to the uninitiated. When Sir F. Palgrave, in his History of the Anglo-Saxons, ed. 1867, p. 146, says, with reference to the Hatton MS. (V), that—"a colloquial language, approaching nearly to modern English, seems to have existed concurrently with the more cultivated language, which we call Anglo-Saxon, at a period before the conquest; and one of the versions of the New Testament[1] is in this language," we have to remember that the Hatton MS. is merely a modernised version (later than the conquest) of the Royal MS. (VI), which in its turn is copied from MS. Bodley (III). There is not a trace of any variation in the language, beyond the substitution of the word "lage" (law) in place of the then obsolescent "æ̂" with the same meaning, of the word "coc" for "hana" in ch. xxii. 60, and one or two other similar substitutions. What therefore Sir F. Palgrave calls "colloquial" is, in fact, merely "later."

A suggestion was made to me that, if the Royal MS. (VI) be earlier than the Hatton MS. (V), it should have occupied the upper part of the page, and the variations of the Hatton MS. should have come below it. But the fact is, that I have followed Kemble's plan of shewing the latest and earliest forms side by side, which is most convenient in practice, as shewing more directly what changes were introduced by mere lapse of time. It is very rarely indeed that this can be done; it is very seldom that copies of the same identical text can be found, differing from each other in no respect but date. If any student wishes to see how the older language was modified in the course of years, by examining the spellings of the same words in the same context at two different dates, the means for the investigation are here ready to his hand, unencumbered by actual changes in the phraseology. For philological purposes, this is no small matter. It should be remembered too, that I give all the variations in spelling of the Royal MS., so that it is practically printed in extenso, whilst the text in the left-hand column (the variations of B. noted and excepted) gives the text from which the Royal MS. was actually copied, so that the reader can see at once whence it came, and also into what form it passed.

[1] He should have said—"of the Gospels." There is no trace of any translation of any other part of the New Testament.

Putting aside all preconceived fancies, the critical comparison of the MSS. points, in my opinion, to three results, which are, I suspect, rather different to those which have generally found acceptance. I imagine that many have supposed that there may have been several translations of the Gospels into Anglo-Saxon, that numerous copies were made of them, and that most of the copies have long since perished. Now, all these three things may have been true, and cannot be disproved; but the actual evidence is all the other way, and ought to receive its full share of recognition. When we consider these undoubted facts, that, out of the six MSS. now existing, it is absolutely certain that MSS. I., III., and IV. scarcely differ in a single letter (due allowances being made for variable spellings); that MS. V. is copied from MS. VI. and from nothing else, and that MS. VI. is copied from MS. III. and from nothing else, we are almost irresistibly led to conclude that perhaps not very many of the copies have perished, that they may never have been very numerous, and that there is at present not the faintest trace of any other version[1]. I feel the more bound to say this, because the results differ from what I expected to find, and those suppositions which we feel compelled to entertain are more likely to be true than those which we merely build upon conjecture.

It has also been a question hitherto, which of these copies of the Anglo-Saxon Gospels is the oldest. Putting aside the later HATTON and ROYAL MSS., and admitting that the CAMBRIDGE MS. (II) is probably the latest of the other four, we may be satisfied with noting that the remaining three—at whatever time written out, and I see no reason for making one much older than another—are practically the same text, and of one period, and may be referred, as they have usually been, to the last decade of the tenth century; the date of the translation itself may have been somewhat earlier. I have once before quoted the opinion of Sir F. Madden that "the Anglo-Saxon version of the Gospels may be safely attributed to the ninth century," with his further remark that "none of the

[1] The only hints of other versions are (1) the mention of a translation made by Beda (Smith's Bede, p. 753) and (2) the notion that a translation may have been made by order of king Ælfred (see my Preface to St Mark, p. ii).

MSS. appear to give the version in its original purity;" see Pref. to St Mark, p. iii.; but I now feel bound to say that the present evidence militates, to some extent, against both these suppositions. The close agreement of the MSS. seems to shew that the version is nearly as pure now as it ever was, and the language belongs rather to the tenth than to the ninth century. It seems, however, reasonable to suppose that this version of the Gospels is older than Ælfric's version of the Pentateuch, made probably after A. D. 990; for Ælfric would hardly have turned his attention to the books of Moses until he had ascertained that the Gospels had first been translated.

These remarks refer to the Anglo-Saxon or Wessex MSS. only. The Northumbrian glosses are altogether distinct from them and independent; but they are not independent of each other, since the gloss in the RUSHWORTH MS. (VIII) frequently depends upon that in the LINDISFARNE MS. (VII), and in many places must have been copied from it, as already shewn in my Preface to St Mark's Gospel, at p. xiii.

I again express my thanks to the Syndics of the Pitt Press, for undertaking the publication of this third volume of the series of the Anglo-Saxon and Northumbrian Gospels.

⁂ This seems to be the most convenient place for remarking that in the Rushworth MS., in the last three chapters of the Gospel, frequent large crosses appear above certain words in the Latin text, which seem to have been added before the gloss was written. These are given in Mr Waring's edition, with a few exceptions. The object of them is clear, viz. to mark the expressions used by Christ himself. This will be evident from the following list of the places where they occur, though in one or two places they have been wrongly inserted, as will be pointed out. The Latin words thus marked are the following:

CHAP. XXII. 8. euntes. 15. desiderio. 17. accipite. 19. hoc. 20. hic. 25. reges (unnoticed by Mr Waring). 32. ego (the marked word should have been simon in v. 31). 34. dico. 38. satis est. 40. orate. 42. pater. 46. surgite (quid dormitis being omitted in R). 47. illo loquente (marked by mistake). 51. sinete (unnoticed by Mr Waring). 52. tanquam (L. has quasi). 55. igne (unnoticed by Mr Waring, and marked by mistake). 67. si uobis. 70. uos dicitis.

CHAP. XXIII. 3. tu dicis. 28. filiae. 34. pater. 43. amen. 46. pater. 50. ecce (marked by mistake).
